

National Ethics Codes

The Ethics Committee have consolidated many national psychological associations' ethics codes into one document. We believe that the more ethics code information we can share with others the stronger the discipline of psychology becomes, as readers can view other documents to examine overlap and differences.

Please note that some country listings have both the webpage where a link to the code can be found, along with a separate link to the code itself, whereas others include only a link to the code itself. Some countries have more than one professional association or more than one code. Additionally, there are a few codes in which English translations or versions have been included because the code could not be found online, or they are available through universities or other organizations, but we are working on including official sites. We have checked with native individuals, when possible, to confirm accuracy and have done our best but given code developments, link changes, and possible inaccuracies there may be some updates needed. This listing is a work in progress so please check back for any updates. If you would like to add a link and a code or clarify an inaccuracy, we welcome them at m.leach@louisville.edu
