The Asian Conference on Psychology & the Behavioral Sciences (ACP) is one of the longest established and best attended events organised by The International Academic Forum \(IAFOR\). ACP brings together delegates from many different national, cultural and linguistic backgrounds to present new research and exchange ideas. This exceptional platform welcomes speakers and delegates working in any area of psychology, from academics and clinical psychologists to psychiatrists and therapists, in both the private and public sectors, for challenging debate and stimulating discussions around the latest concepts and newest approaches.

IAAP DIVISION 15 – ACTIVITIES IN ASIA

IAFOR's conferences are encouraging and nurturing environments where ideas can be shared and tested, where research synergies and collaborations can be formed, and where some of the biggest names in the field have the opportunity to interact with up-and-coming young faculty members.

IAFOR's conferences are organised in partnership with some of the world's most reputable institutions, including Birkbeck, University of London (UK), University of Sussex (UK), Osaka University (Japan), Moscow State University (Russia), Barcelona University (Spain) and Virginia Tech (USA), and feature programmes developed by leading academics to ensure both timeliness and academic rigour.

ACP is held alongside The Asian Conference on Ethics, Religion & Philosophy (ACERP). These two events are scheduled simultaneously to maximise opportunities for interdisciplinary discussion and interaction. Registration for either conference allows participants to attend sessions in the other.

The theme of this year's congress is "Starting from the Beginning – Laying the Foundation for Lifelong Mental Health" and it rightly places an important emphasis on early identification, illness prevention and health promotion over a lifespan. "Lifespan psychiatry" is perhaps something that we have already been doing. The concept of psychiatry over a lifespan also reflects the consideration for early onset, the complexity and the chronicity of mental illnesses, particularly with the fact that 75 percent of mental disorders develop by the age of 24. If we do not address mental health issues well during childhood years, the problems are likely to escalate and become more severe and harder to treat in adulthood. As child and adolescent psychiatrists, we are well positioned to not just treat children and adolescent, but in a way, their adult caregivers, parents and family units as well.

Our 24th IACAPAP congress aims to cover broad topics that are close to our hearts but also include emerging trends and topics of interests. The full four-day program is packed with interesting talks, symposiums and panel discussions. A highlight of this IACAPAP is the movement to raise awareness of mental illnesses among children called "Break the Stigma for families", which was first started during AACAPAP annual meetings and championed by Dr Andrés Martin. Held for the first time in Asia, the agenda of the movement aligns fittingly with the "Beyond the Label" anti-stigma campaign that was started locally in 2018 by the National Council of Social Services, Singapore. The event will end with a "mental health festival" set within the compound of the Institute of Mental Health, the country's only tertiary mental health facility.
