

LGBTQ+ prejudice in universities

Prejudice against sexual and gender diversity refers to attitudes expressed in the form of emotions, behaviors and beliefs that aim to inferiorly hierarchize gays, lesbians, bisexuals, transgenders, and gender diverse people. Unfortunately, this type of prejudice is also found in universities, leading not only to drop out but to negative mental health outcomes. This proposal aims to investigate how prejudice against sexual and gender diversity is expressed in universities cross-culturally and how prejudice varies concerning sociodemographic characteristics and with the area of training (i.e., undergraduate discipline). It involves data collection of new samples, analysis of secondary data, and literature review on the topic.
